The Children's Organ Transplant Association (COTA) is a national, nonprofit organization dedicated to helping families raise funds for transplant-related expenses. The organization began in Bloomington, Indiana, in 1986 following a fundraising drive to place two-year-old David McConnell on the liver transplant waiting list. A group of concerned citizens raised more than $100,000 in two months, but sadly, David died while waiting for a donor liver. However, his courageous struggle inspired the group to organize what today is the Children's Organ Transplant Association.

Over the past 20 years, COTA has helped more than 1,000 families raise millions of dollars for transplant-related expenses. Additionally, the Children's Organ Transplant Association has distributed more than two million organ and tissue donor registration cards throughout the nation since 2000.

The Children's Organ Transplant Association staff and volunteers have helped families in 49 states, in all regions of the United States, with fundraising campaigns ranging from a few thousand dollars to more than $700,000.

The Need is Great...

There is much to be done. Here are some stunning facts which illustrate the need:

- At any given moment, more than 90,000 children and adults are awaiting an organ transplant.
- A typical liver transplant costs more than $300,000, a significant expense for any family, but a catastrophic figure for those without insurance.
- Following a successful transplant operation, lifetime prescription costs may be in excess of $100,000.
- Sadly, without a payment guarantee a child cannot be placed on an organ transplant waiting list.
